If I lock my Equifax credit report, can anyone still access it?

When you lock your Equifax credit report, access continues to be allowed for certain requestors, including: sources reviewing your application for employment; companies that have a current account or relationship with you; collection agencies acting on behalf of those whom you owe; resources that wish to make pre-approved offers of credit or insurance; fraud detection and preventive purposes; applications for insurance; and federal, state, and local government agencies.
