In order to escape abuse, domestic violence victims need sustainable employment so they can provide for their family's basic needs. the project will support working domestic violence survivors and parents by providing some basic needs assistance in moving into safe housing, maintaining that housing, and transitioning to independence. That support will include moving costs and also cleaning upon move-in, at transition out, and once annually to maintain the cleanliness of the rental units. Single working parents in particular struggle to stay on top of the myriad daily responsibilities in addition to work and parenting; this will alleviate those burdens while maintaining positive landlord relationships.
